

You loved your last book...but what are you going to read next?

Using our unique guidance tools, Lovereading will help you find new books to keep you inspired and entertained.

---

Opening Extract from...

Based on a True Story

Written by Delphine de Vigan

Translated from the French by George Miller

Published by Bloomsbury

All text is copyright © of the author

This Opening Extract is exclusive to Lovereading.
Please print off and read at your leisure.

---

BASED ON A TRUE STORY

DELPHINE DE VIGAN

Translated from the French by George Miller

B L O O M S B U R Y

LONDON • OXFORD • NEW YORK • NEW DELHI • SYDNEY

Bloomsbury Publishing
An imprint of Bloomsbury Publishing Plc
50 Bedford Square 1385 Broadway
London New York
WC1B 3DP NY 10018
UK USA

www.bloomsbury.com

BLOOMSBURY and the Diana logo are trademarks of Bloomsbury Publishing Plc

First published in 2015 in France as D'après une histoire vraie by JC Lattès, Paris

First published in Great Britain 2017

Copyright © by JC Lattès 2015

English language translation © George Miller, 2017

Delphine de Vigan has asserted her right under the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act, 1988, to be identified as Author of this work.

This book is supported by the Institut français
(Royaume-Uni) as part of the Burgess programme.

INSTITUT
FRANÇAIS
ROYAUME-UNI

Grateful acknowledgement is given for permission to publish excerpts from the following copyrighted material. On pages 5 and 265, MISERY by Stephen King, copyright © 1987, used by permission of Hodder & Stoughton. Reprinted with the permission of Gallery, a division of Simon & Schuster, Inc. from MISERY by Stephen King. Copyright © 1987 by Stephen King, Tabitha King and Arthur B. Greene, Trustee. All rights reserved. On page 147, THE DARK HALF by Stephen King, copyright © 1989, used by permission of Hodder & Stoughton. Reprinted with the permission of Gallery, a division of Simon & Schuster, Inc. from THE DARK HALF by Stephen King. Copyright © 1989 by Stephen King. All rights reserved. Translation of excerpt from Robert Desnos's poem 'J'ai tant rêvé de toi' 'I've dreamed of you so much' on pages 288–9 © 1972 by William Kulik; published by Sheep Meadow Press, Riverdale-on-Hudson, NY, 2004.

Every reasonable effort has been made to trace copyright holders of material reproduced in this book, but if any have been inadvertently overlooked the publishers would be glad to hear from them.

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic or mechanical, including photocopying, recording, or any information storage or retrieval system, without prior permission in writing from the publishers.

No responsibility for loss caused to any individual or organization acting on or refraining from action as a result of the material in this publication can be accepted by Bloomsbury or the author.

British Library Cataloguing-in-Publication Data

A catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library.

ISBN:	HB:	978-1-4088-7880-4
	TPB:	978-1-4088-7881-1
	EPUB:	978-1-4088-7883-5

Typeset by Integra Software Services Pvt. Ltd.

Printed and bound in Great Britain by CPI Group (UK) Ltd, Croydon CRO 4YY

2 4 6 8 10 9 7 5 3 1

To find out more about our authors and books visit www.bloomsbury.com. Here you will find extracts, author interviews, details of forthcoming events and the option to sign up for our newsletters.

A few months after my last novel came out, I stopped writing. For almost three years, I didn't write a single line. Hackneyed phrases sometimes have to be taken literally: I didn't write a formal letter, a thank-you note, a holiday postcard or a shopping list. Nothing that required any sort of effort or necessitated any concern about form. Not one line, not one word. The sight of a pad, notebook or index card made me feel nauseous.

Over time, the act of writing itself became rare, hesitant and no longer occurred without apprehension. The simple act of holding a pen felt increasingly difficult.

Later, I experienced panic as soon as I opened a Word document.

I would search for the right position, the optimal screen angle. I'd stretch my legs out under the table. And there I'd stay, motionless for hours, staring at the screen.

Later still, my hands would start shaking as soon as I brought them near the keyboard.

I turned down every invitation I received without exception: articles, short stories, prefaces and contributions to edited collections. The mere mention of writing in a letter or message was enough to tie my stomach in knots.

I couldn't write any more.

Writing was out.

I now know that various rumours went round my friends, the book world and the social networks. I know people said I'd never write again, that I'd reached the end of something, that bonfires of straw – or paper – always burn out eventually. The man I love imagined it was my relationship with him that had made me lose my drive, or the flaw I needed to feed my work, and consequently thought I'd soon leave him.

When friends, relations and sometimes even journalists ventured questions about my silence, I cited various reasons or obstacles, including tiredness, foreign travel, the pressure that comes with success, or even the completion of a phase of my work. I gave the excuse of too little time, too little focus or too much to do, and got myself out of it with a smile whose fake air of calm didn't fool anyone.

Today I know that all this was just a pretext. None of it counted for anything.

To people who are close to me, I probably sometimes mentioned fear. I don't recall speaking of terror, but that's what it was. I can admit it now: writing, which had been my main activity for so long, which had so profoundly transformed my existence and was so precious to me, terrified me.

The truth is that just when I should have got back down to writing, according to the cycle that alternated fallow periods, incubation and actual writing – virtually a biorhythmic cycle, which I'd experienced for over a decade – just when I was preparing to embark on the book for which I had taken lots of notes and collected a mass of material, I met L.

Today I know that L. is the sole reason for my powerlessness. And that the two years that we were friends almost made me stop writing for ever.