INTRODUCTION

Oman's potential as a tourist destination is still unfolding, but all the right ingredients are here: unspoilt landscapes, wonderful beaches, a rich culture and friendly people. Oman occupies the southeastern corner of the Arabian peninsula, straddling the Tropic of Cancer along the coast of the Indian Ocean and the Arabian Gulf. It has land borders with the UAE, Saudi Arabia and Yemen, and an area of just over 300,000 sq km (115,800 sq miles), making it slightly larger than Italy. Recent figures show that Oman has a population of some 4,741,305 people; a dramatic increase from the December 2010 census which showed a total population of 2,694,094, with the majority living in Muscat or along the Batinah Coast enjoying year-round sunshine. Foreigners (mostly guest workers) account for 12.5 percent of the population.

VARIED LANDSCAPES

One of your first impressions of Oman will be the vast stretches of colourful flowers that line the sweeping highways. Armies of

Frankincense

There are over 300 types of incense trees, but the best-quality frankincense comes from the tree Boswellia sacra, known as silver frankincense. It grows abundantly in the Dhofar region, as does myrrh, of which Commiphora myrrha produces the best quality.

imported workers tend the millions of petunias, marigolds, bougainvillea and oleander that offer pleasant urban driving. Beyond the city limits is a good network of coastal roads giving access to the cooler mountainous interior. Ample groundwater flows from these mountains providing 90 percent of requirements, distributed through the ancient system of falaj water channels, numbering around 40,000 – the longest of which is almost 10km (6 miles).

More than 2,100km (1,300 miles) of coastline stretch from the strategically important Strait of Hormuz, along the Gulf of Oman and Indian Ocean, to the Gulf of Aden in the south. Around the Musandam peninsula in the north and the province of Dhofar in the south, the coast is lined with steep, rugged cliffs, interspersed with small sandy bays.

Between them is a gentler coastal stretch of shallow bays and sandy beaches, which attract a variety of wildlife, including the endangered green turtle which nests here. In Dhofar, a quirk of nature turns an otherwise searing summer coastline into a cool, misty rain-soaked landscape as the khareef monsoon brushes the Arabian peninsula at this one spot between June and September.

The Hajar Mountains stretch from the border with the UAE for some 500km (310 miles) down to Sur, rising to over 3,000m (9,800ft) in the Jabal Akhdar (Green Mountain) massif at the centre of the range. The verdant mountain-tops and deep wooded valleys shelter a rich variety of flora and fauna.

The coastline between Muscat and the UAE border is the flat wide Batinah coast, dotted with impressive castles and large irrigated farms. South of Muscat towards Sur is a more rugged landscape of unbroken grey-sand beach, lapped by a gentle sea – yet the plain, never more than a kilometre wide, is still extensively cultivated, particularly with date plantations.

Beyond lies the stark, inhospitable landscape of Wahibah and the Empty Quarter deserts. But the desert is also a great preserver, with valuable oil reserves lying below the surface, waiting to be discovered. Petroleum Development Oman (PDO) controls almost all of Oman’s oil industry and employs the second-largest number of workers after the government.

LAND OF TRADITIONS

Modern Oman is embracing responsible tourism and is fast gaining a reputation as a destination for the discerning tourist wanting quality hotels, good food and adventure. The varied terrain and coastline offer unlimited adventures – 4x4 thrills in the gorges and deserts; mountain trekking; scuba-diving in clear seas teeming with fish; dhow sailing and plenty more besides.
